Fine Art for "Endangered Animals"

At CCMA ART MUSEUM
217 S. Lemon Ave.
Ontario, CA. 91710
www.chaffeymuseum.org
9:30 Wed Sept 13

Sherif Hakeem is a fine art wildlife artist who produces highly detailed Hyperrealistic portraits of endangered species and abused animals using white charcoal pencil on black archival paper. Sherif states his painstaking capture of details is used to create a highly detailed piece in the style of Hyperrealism. He feels this art form provides a more vivid depiction of his subjects than what one can see with the naked eye. He feels this style opens a much deeper and thought-provoking conversation regarding each endangered species and helps give these beautiful and endangered animals a voice for protection.

His goal is to raise as much support as possible by selling his artwork and donate a minimum of 20% to sanctuaries and conservation organizations that advocate for endangered wildlife and abused animals.

His art was recently accepted into the prestigious Society of Animal Artists and in an art exhibition at Art 4 Apes gallery, a Florida Not For Profit Corporation. His work has also appeared on well-known websites including ArtsyShark.com.

Artistic Expression, Art Pottery and a Professional Life

Bill Breer

You can see the influence of archaeology in my work, in the pictograph-like drawings and some vessel forms. As an artist, I am most interested in the creation of beauty. You will not find religious and political messages here. The influence of psychology is more subtle, manifested in my use of color and symbolism. I like to use brightly-colored glazes that run into and over each other. Sometimes these glazes flow around human or animal figures. I have stamped into the pot. Fantasize about the interaction of color and form as if it were an ink blot test. Many of these pots lend themselves to such free association. There is no absolute meaning to this symbolism; it is what you decide it is. I am presenting a wide sampling of my work, most created while I was a resident artist at AMOCA.

On View now through September 9, 2023
